TANGO MARATHON 'LA PARTIDA'

Friday 24, 20.00 hrs to Sunday 26 July, 0.00 hrs restaurant, room 28, party passe-partouts: 35,- euro
reservations: <http://www.tangomarathon.nl>

In this office emigrants bought tickets for one of the Lloyd ships, taking them to the South-Americas.

'La Partida' is the first Amsterdam Tangomathon, starting early Friday evening and running straight through in one go until Sunday at midnight.

Spurred on by DJs Christos, Bachar, Ada and others, dancers can whirl around the restaurant, the former ticket office and in a marquee on the terrace.

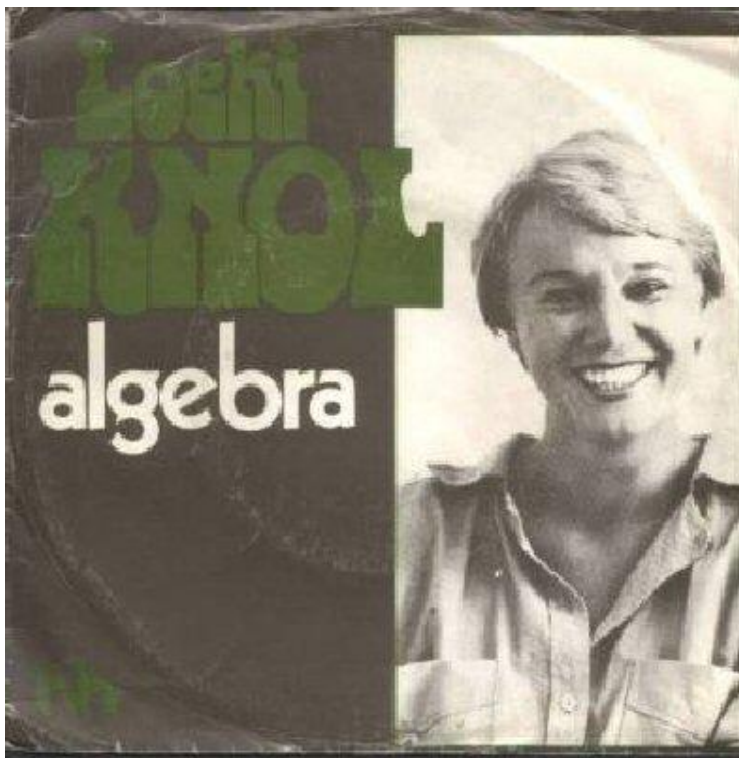

If you would like to join this event, please make your reservations via the 'La Partida' website. Should you need to sleep at some point, a special deal is available.

Some of the passengers who bought a boat ticket here, shipped for Buenos Aires, Argentina. A small exhibition shows pictures from the Museo Nacional de la Inmigración in Buenos Aires, of the arrival of immigrants.

Decades before poly-amory became fashionable, this song was loved mainly by female math-students.

When Dutch singer Loeki Knol sang about her love for two men in the charming song 'Algebra', it got stuck for 4 weeks on number 27 of the Top 40 singles chart. This was 1976 and perhaps the subject was a bit too risky for the song to become a major hit. When the book 'I love two men' was published in 2005, three editions of it sold out in two months. Clearly Ageeth Veenemans had struck upon an issue the public was ready for. She gave up her day-job to become a fulltime promotor of poly-amorous relationships. In Lloyd Time, Katayoun Arian (the Group Marriage Initiative) put together a programme of talks with Veeneman, about her personal experiences and the myth of monogamy.

Filmmaker Kenji Ouellet will talk about his film 'Mehr als eine Liebe'(2009), about the poly-amorous situation in Germany.

This summer artist Francisco Camacho set up the Group Marriages Initiative. He aims to collect enough support for a petition to parliament with a demand to open up the civil marriages act. If you should like to sign it, this is your chance to join the summer of group love.
